I think the most serious environmental problem is global warming. I have two reasons for this.

First, global warming is causing climate changes. Because of this problem, many animals are dying. For example, predators from warmer areas are moving to different areas and eating different animals.

Another reason is some animals can't adapt themselves to the climate changes. Some coral in Okinawa are dying because of this.

Second, the problem of melting glaciers. If the glaciers melt, the sea level will rise and cause many problems such as causing islands to sink and the loss of the beaches.

To solve these problems, there are many things that we can do. Using bicycles is one solution. If we use bikes instead of cars, we can reduce the amount of carbon dioxide which is causing global warming. Saving electricity is a good way to solve these problems too.

From these reasons, I think global warming is the most serious environmental issue.
